Of course, the boxes vary according to the type of book I'm reading but the principal remains the same. With 'Others', Herbert not only ticked all my boxes, he filled them in with black permanent marker! James Herbert is a master at the opening line, and this one has a belter; a single paragraph, "My redemption began in Hell."

Others by James Herbert - Goodreads

Author of such classic chilling tales as The Fog and The Rats, Britain's foremost horror master James Herbert now cleverly transcends the boundaries of detective fiction and the supernatural for Others, a book that begins in the bowels of Hell. In this fiery underworld we meet a former Hollywood movie star, thrust there for a lifetime of depravity.

Others is a long book, and much time is spent on atmosphere, mood, and setup. But not all horror readers enjoy excessive exposition. James Herbert is known for grisly situations in his books, and patient readers will be rewarded with some of the most disturbing, frightening, and outright nasty scenes he has ever written in Others. It's a terrifying, doom-laden journey, but Herbert isn't merely interested in making people cringe.

Prolific horror writer Herbert (Portent, 1996, etc.) revives a sentimental favorite, Victor Hugo's Quasimodo, dresses him up in a modern setting, and sends him forth as Nicholas Dismas, private investigator. Dismas was so malformed at birth—hunchback, spinal curvature, twisted and withered right leg, birdboned chest, a forehead overlapping his eyes, overlarge ears, flat nose, backhair ...

Epeolatry Book Review: Others by James Herbert - The ...

I loved Others by James Herbert a lot. It was a gripping, disturbing action packed book full of believable characters. The reader was good, but back in the early 2000s I bought the abridged version on cassette read by Robert Powell and I honestly think that he was a better reader with more expression and better voices than the bloke who read the unabridged version.
